Vice-Chancellor's Address

Dr. Madhavi Khode Chaware highlighted:

- The need for an economy that uplifts all sections of society.
- Insights from Gramgita by Rashtrasant Tukadoji Maharaj as a model for a society-centric economy.
- The importance of village development as the foundation of national progress.
- How schemes like Skill India, Startup India, and entrepreneurship are reshaping employment opportunities.
- Encouragement to students to convert ideas into enterprises to contribute to a Developed India.

Speaking on the theme 'Society-Oriented Economy, Skill India, Startups, and the Interrelationship with New Government Policies', Vice-Chancellor Dr. Khode Chaware said that Rashtrasant Tukadoji Maharaj, through his Gramgita, had provided an excellent example of how a society-centric economy should be. According to Rashtrasant, if the village is improved by providing employment to every individual according to their talent, then the nation will progress; from self-governance will emerge good governance. As per his thoughts, national development begins from village development.

She further said that everyone today wants to leave the village, resulting in increased migration for employment, and this situation must change. Considering the traditional employment opportunities that once existed in rural areas, the Central Government has launched schemes like Skill India and Startups to build a society-oriented economy. Economics students should not merely acquire theoretical knowledge but should also contribute to national development by acquiring skills and creating employment opportunities. If human and natural resources are utilized properly, employment generation will rise, the country and society will progress, and the happiness index will improve. She stated that if students are determined, they can transform their ideas into enterprises and contribute to building a developed India.

(Vice-Chancellor's Address- Dr. Madhavi Khode Chaware)

Keynote Address by Mrs. Shwetal Thakre

Mrs. Thakre compared India's economic growth with Western nations and emphasized:

- India's capacity to become the world's top economy through innovation and startups.
- Historical strength of India's decentralized village economy.
- India's GDP contribution of nearly 20% during the 14th–16th centuries.
- Contribution of women's home enterprises, which remain largely unaccounted in the GDP.
- Greater need for discussion on society-oriented economic policies.

Keynote speaker Mrs. Shwetal Thakre presented information on the growth rates of India and Western countries. She said students can help transform India—currently the world’s third-largest economy—into the number one global economy by acquiring skills and establishing innovative startups. For this, it is essential to understand ancient Indian culture along with Western economic systems. Before British rule, India had the world’s strongest economy. Every village had employment opportunities. India had an economy based on festivals and cultural events, ensuring work for everyone. With most employment dependent on agriculture and a decentralized Panchayati Raj system, India’s economic strength remained intact. During the Maurya and Mughal periods, and even from the 14th to 16th centuries, India’s GDP contribution was around 20%. During that era, India also followed a free-trade system. She added that although numerous women currently run home-based businesses, their share is not counted in the GDP. To make India a developed nation once again, deeper discussions are needed on society-oriented economic policies such as Startups and Skill India.

(Keynote Address by Mrs. Shwetal Thakre)

Academic Remarks

Dr. Medha Kanetkar, Dean, Faculty of Commerce & Management, spoke on shifting economic patterns from need-based village production to industrial overproduction, stressing sustainable usage of natural resources.

While presenting the introductory remarks, Dean Dr. Medha Kanetkar said we are forgetting the backbone of the strong economy we once had. Every village had production systems based on people’s needs. Production took place only when there was demand. After industrialization, production started before demand, creating competition and depleting natural resources. India is rich in natural resources, and there is a need for discussions on building a society-oriented economy through welfare schemes.

(Academic Remark- Dr. Medha Kanetkar, Dean, Faculty of Commerce & Management)

(Speaker- AR. Abhishek Despande)

The Inaugural program was anchored by Dr. Shilpa Puri, and the vote of thanks was delivered by Head of Department Dr. Rahul Kharabe. A large number of economics experts, teachers, and students were present for the event.

(Vote of thanks - Dr. Rahul Kharabe, Head, Department of Business Management)
